DOCUMENT 1 (Overview)

Tom Doeppner was born in Berlin in 1920. Tom’s mother, Ella, was Jewish, but his father, August, was not, and Tom did not consider himself Jewish either. He attended Quaker summer camps and clubs in Berlin. In 1935, Nazi Germany instituted the Nuremberg Laws, and Tom was officially classified as a “Mischling”—someone who was of “mixed race.” When he was 18, he illegally escaped from Germany to the Netherlands. There he asked the Quakers to help him immigrate to the United States. The American Friends Service Committee (AFSC) worked to get Doeppner a scholarship offer from a college, as Tom was a gifted student who wanted to pursue a career in electrical engineering.

The AFSC had been created in 1917 to address the tremendous humanitarian needs during World War I. At its peak between 1920 and 1924, the AFSC provided meals for around a million European children a day. Funding for some of this work came from the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, which continued to support the AFSC’s work throughout the 1930s and 1940s.

After the violent anti-Jewish Kristallnacht pogroms of November 9–10, 1938, the AFSC expanded its work and established a Refugee Division to assist individuals and families in need. While Quaker relief efforts continued, the AFSC also began helping people flee Nazi Europe, communicate with loved ones, and adjust to life in the United States.

The AFSC formed the center of a network of refugee aid agencies in Europe and fielded hundreds of requests every month from individuals seeking to escape Nazism. In practice, the AFSC primarily worked with “non-Aryan Christians” (those considered “racially Jewish” by the Nuremberg Laws but who did not consider themselves Jewish by religion) and those in mixed marriages between Jews and non-Jews. One of those refugees was Doeppner.

With the AFSC’s help, Doeppner was able to secure the backing of influential people: Professor Albert Einstein (himself a refugee from Nazi Germany) even wrote a letter of recommendation on his behalf. Oberlin College was interested in Tom but was only able to offer a scholarship that covered tuition. Eventually, Tom was admitted to McPherson College, a small Christian college in Kansas.

McPherson was one of more than 200 colleges that actively recruited refugees, with students raising funds to pay for full scholarships. Doeppner struggled to obtain a US visa as a student, since he technically did not have a country to return to after graduation. AFSC helped him secure a visitor visa and paid for his passage to the United States.

While at McPherson, Doeppner did very well academically, but immigration troubles still followed him. After completing his first year, he was ordered to report for duty in the German Army. He replied, “I really don’t care whether you list me in your files as a deserter or otherwise. I no longer claim German citizenship but look forward to becoming a citizen of the United States.” After college, Doeppner enlisted in the US Army in 1944.
Tom Doeppner first wrote to the United States in 1938, when he contacted an American Quaker named Albert Martin. Tom had gotten to know Albert in Berlin when Albert and his wife, Anne, volunteered in the Quaker Center there. By 1939, Albert was back in the United States working at a refugee hostel in the Midwest.

Dear Mr Martin,

I am writing to you today with a question, the answer to which may be of crucial importance to me. I know that I am one of a great many asking this question, but I believe that in my case there are various circumstances that will make assistance easier.

During the international crisis in September, in fact just a few days before the Munich Conference, I crossed the border illegally and without a passport, and am now living with my father, who is the manager of the United Press of America for Holland and Belgium. As a result of a petition to the Dutch justice minister, I am allowed to remain here under the condition that I seek to obtain a residence permit in another country. When this is accomplished, I will receive a Dutch certificate of identity, in which the visa for the relevant country can be entered.

You remember perhaps that I always wanted to study engineering in the United States?

Is there a possibility of me entering the States, at least as a student? Although my father has significant commitments to other members of the family—he supports among others my mother in Berlin and is maintaining my sister, who is studying languages in Paris in order to become an interpreter—he would agree to ensure that I do not become a burden on the American state. In practice it would admittedly not be possible for him to pay for my accommodation and studies in their entirety, but he would support me to the extent that, with the aid of some part-time work, I would get by. In addition, the United Press would also be willing to help him and me with advice and practical assistance.

I know that a study visa does not equal a permanent residence permit and work permit. I imagine, however, that at the end of my studies I could manage to obtain the permit, if not in the States, then in another American country. Besides, no one knows today what the world will look like in three or four years.

I am aware that the path will not be easy, but I want to pursue it if there is any way to do so.
My question and request to you, dear Mr Martin, is this: that you tell me what steps I must undertake to enter America, and that you, if possible, help me in doing so.

I got your address from Manfred and Lili Pollatz here in Haarlem. I have told them a lot about you and what you gave me and the other Young Friends.

When you send me your reply, would you also include a line or two to let me know how you, your wife, Haines and Dicki are getting on?

With Friendly greetings,

Thomas Döppner

Professor Martin contacted the AFSC, who then wrote to Doeppner, letting him know that it was “not impossible” to assist him with his study plans. They asked for more detailed information. Meanwhile, there were internal communications that concerned the practical matters of securing a visa and financial support and finding an institution that would accept Tom.

Dear Miss Dukas:

Thank you very much for your cordial note about Thomas Doeppner. It would, of course, be very valuable for him to have an endorsement by Professor Einstein. So far we have not been able to get a scholarship for him, and it is not certain that he would be able to get a student visa even if he had a scholarship. However, we shall continue to try for a scholarship and we will be very grateful for your help.

Sincerely yours,

Albert Einstein wrote a letter of recommendation for Doeppner, based on what he had heard about Tom's character and academic ability. Several colleges were interested in him, including Oberlin College. Ultimately, Doeppner did not receive enough financial support from Oberlin, but another college offered him an opportunity to attend with a full scholarship.
Letter from McPherson College to Thomas Doeppner outlining its offer and expectations:

Dear Thomas Doeppner,

McPherson College in McPherson, Kansas, has offered you a scholarship for next year. This includes free tuition, room and board, and an opportunity to work for some of the expenses. It is a very good scholarship. The student body of the College has raised this money at some sacrifice, since it is not a wealthy school, and they are looking forward to the arrival of a German student.

There are two points I must bring up before asking for your decision. The first is the fact that McPherson is a small mid-western school, supported by the Church of the Brethren. It has about two hundred students. To quote the letter I received from them:

"It attempts to maintain the standards and ideals of the church on its campus. Smoking, drinking, and dancing are not permitted. If Mr. Doeppner should decide to come he would be expected to conform to the ideals of the college."

The second point is that it is a Liberal Arts college and does not have a regular course in engineering. Its catalog lists such preparatory courses as Advanced Chemistry, Advanced Mathematics, Calculus, Mathematical Theory of Electricity, Atomic Theory, Advanced Physics. I believe these courses would be valuable to you in later study of engineering. Many of the Liberal Arts colleges have offered refugee scholarships, but the regular engineering schools have not shown such an interest. However, I think it much more likely that you might get a scholarship in engineering after making a good record at another American school.

I have been considering very seriously whether this opportunity is one that would be helpful for you. The college students themselves raised the two questions that I have also presented to you. You would find them, I feel sure, wide awake, sympathetic, young people, who would eagerly welcome you and try to make you feel at home.

Sincerely yours,

On the whole I think it would be a worthwhile opportunity. If you will let me know your decision immediately, we will send you the necessary papers for obtaining a student visa. That is a statement of admission to the college and of their plans for your maintenance during the year. Perhaps you had better cable me. The cable address is AMERICAN, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Miss Salmon,

I need not tell you how I felt when I received your letter of August 2nd. Many thanks for all you do for me.

My cable advised you that I accept the kind offer of McPherson College. I accept wholeheartedly, with warmest thanks to the students of your college.

I don't smoke and drink, and I don't want to dance but to be in USA and study there. As for the second point, that there is no regular course in engineering, you are certainly right to state that those basic courses you mention will be valuable to me in later study of engineering. They will even be necessary for me. Furthermore, I am confident that I find my way after having experienced this first year.

As soon as I have received the college papers, I shall apply for the visa. I assume that these papers will tell me at what time the next college year begins. I only have one fear now: that there might be difficulties by the consul. But I trust that everything will run smoothly.

I remain, dear Miss Salmon,

very sincerely yours,

Thomas Döppner

Receiving a scholarship was only part of the process. There were several other logistical pieces that had to be addressed before Doeppner could get to the United States. American consular officers in Holland were so overwhelmed, they told him it might still take months to secure his student visa. McPherson was understanding, but they could only hold his spot for so long.

Dear President Schwalm,

Thank you very much for your kind letter of August 17, in which you tell me that I have been admitted to your college. I appreciate all the help you have given me in this connection, and the personal interest you have taken. I should have liked to reply sooner, but thought it would be better to wait until I had my papers arranged and I could tell you what time I could be expected. There have been some difficulties in obtaining the visa; it was refused the first time I tried to obtain it, although only by word of mouth, then there were the difficulties in obtaining the Dutch identification card, which I had to secure instead of a passport. Now everything seems ready, and I intend to sail on the seventh of October from Antwerp on the "Volendam" of the Holland-America-line. I am very happy that I shall be able to study again, and I am looking forward to the year in your college very much. I know, it will be a stimulating experience.

Please give my thanks and sincere greetings to Mr. Phil Myers, who wrote me such a kind letter of welcome.

With kindest regards, I am

faithfully yours

Tom Doeppner was still gathering his visa paperwork in September 1939 when World War II began in Europe, and he had great difficulty getting a Dutch passport and securing passage to New York. Although the war meant that fewer passenger ships crossed the Atlantic Ocean, Doeppner finally obtained a ticket for the SS Pennland. He made it to Kansas before the spring 1940 semester began.
